Stock Market Outlook for Friday, November 10, 2017

HEADLINE: Natural gas injection season comes to an end with a cold spell impacting the US North-East.

The Markets

Stocks sold off on Thursday as jitters pertaining to tax reform continued. The S&P 500 Index shed more than one percent at the lows of the session, intersecting with the rising 20-day moving average around 2573. But, as has been the case since the volatility realized in August, investors stepped in to buy at this important level of short-term variable support, trimming the bulk of the losses by the closing bell. Momentum indicators on the large-cap benchmark continue to ... <... MORE: click link below ...>
